I HAVE SEEN

There's nothing

beyond what I can see

EVERY THING

Start with the little repeated scenes. You are seeing one view cut into different pieces from different people.

I found a little boy

Sitting at the bottom of

A well

Watching the sky for years

He could tell

The weather, tell

The time, and read the changing seasons

Just by looking up

No one knows

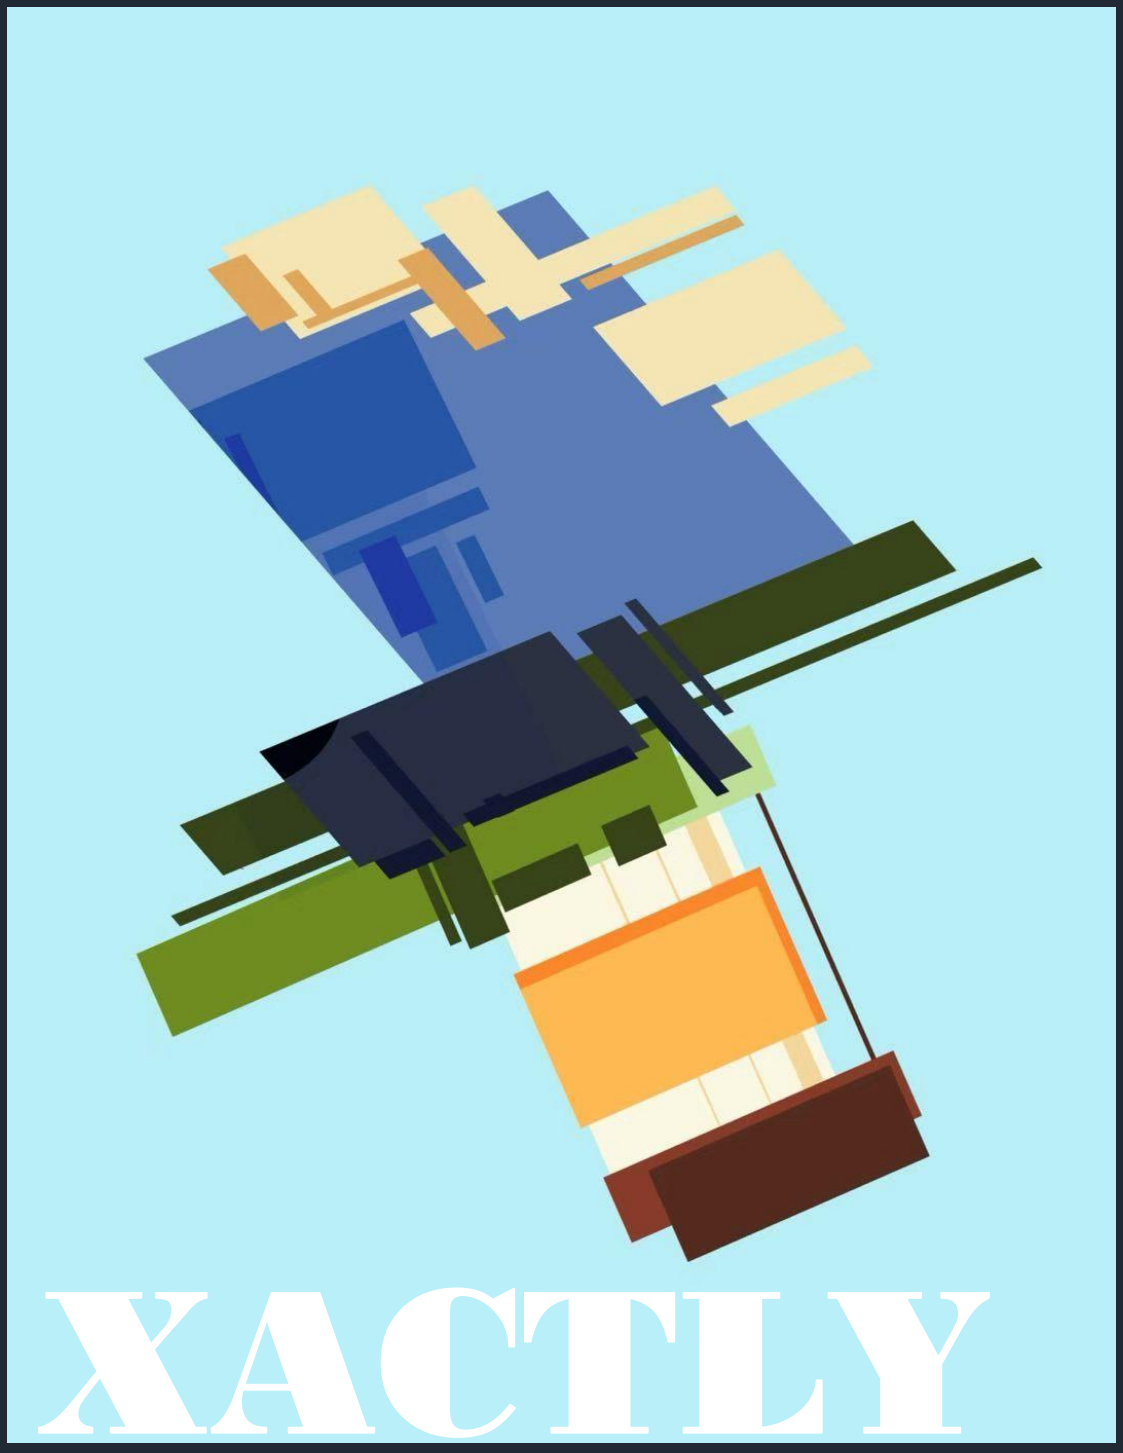

The sky better than

He does

Based on the first page, deal the boy's situation as a reading model: when extremely limited, how can you form knowledge through high concentration?

WHERE I AM

I KNOW

EXACTLY

GOING

Now your situation changes. Assume you are in a race car, speeding on the road. The words are separated into different directions, like the incomplete scenes you see on the road.

The faster he went

The farther away he was

So he looked for another way

The faster you go, the farther way you get. Think about this: Have you ever used a method that only made things worse the harder you tried? Changing the road! Maybe you'll find a better way.

This string of numbers is the wolf's speech, but coded into a different language. If you can't read binary, it's fine. But remember that you can't read it doesn't mean it has no meaning, and if you can, you might find it not that worth reading.

The wolf watched the dogs through

The fence every morning

They had warm

Houses, names

Bowls with

Their names written on them

Nobody

Hunted them. Nobody

Was afraid of them, at least, that

Was what the wolf thought

They must be happy

One day it

Walked into

The town and sat

Beside the nearest dog's tiny house

Knock

Knock

Knock

Barked the dog inside

Back the wolf outside

Change your position, and the story changes.

IT WILL NEVER DIE

The words and the picture are fighting: one says it lives forever, the other says it's just stone. Which one do you believe?

I was put in the courtyard
And called a horse.
My legs were praised
Though I had never used
Them to run
I just sit
There
A horse
Facing west

notice the difference between what others say it is, and what it actually does.

JUST A LETTER

Still the boy. He gets out of the well, an looks at the sky outside a wall.

Dear !#&*!.

I went outside today and saw a flower growing through the wall near our house. I stopped to look at it for a while. The little flower reminded me of my home.

The sky was clear today, and I think I finally understand why you always tell me to look up.

—Me

Where do you usually look? How long has it been since you looked up?

Are you awake?

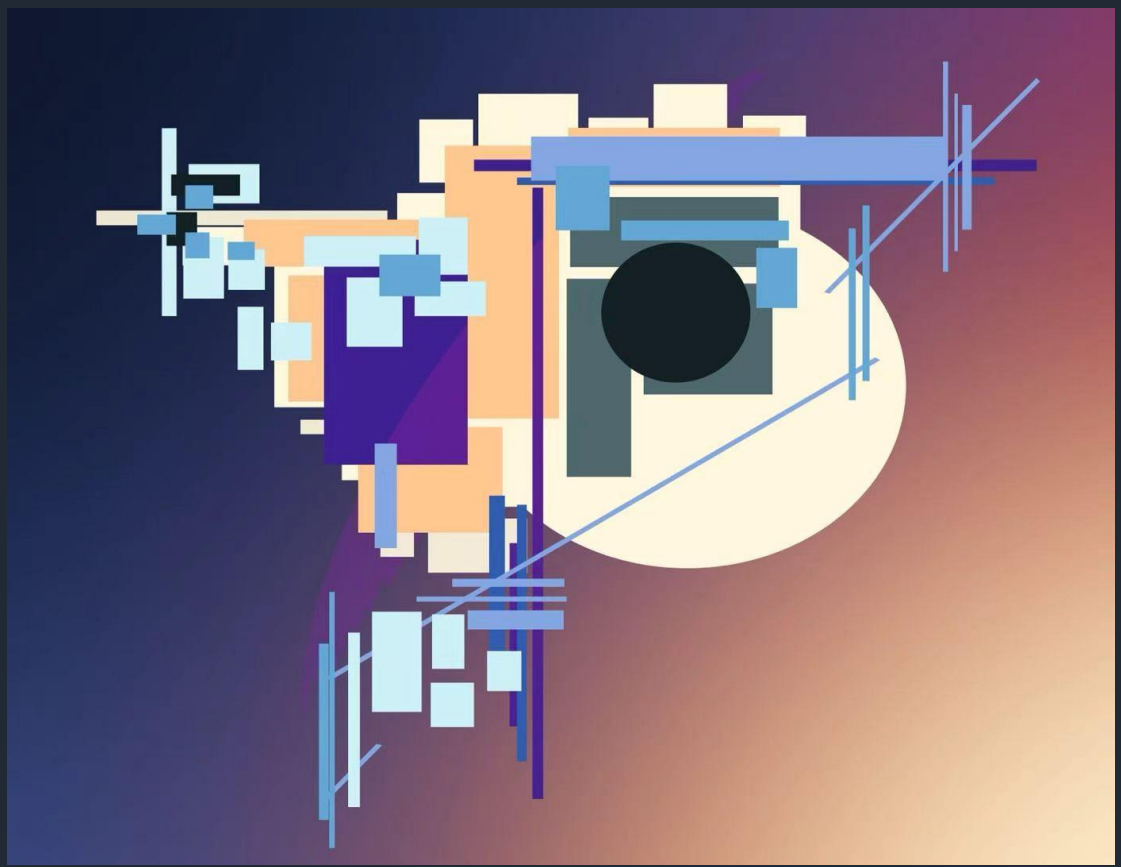

Look outside.

Yeah.

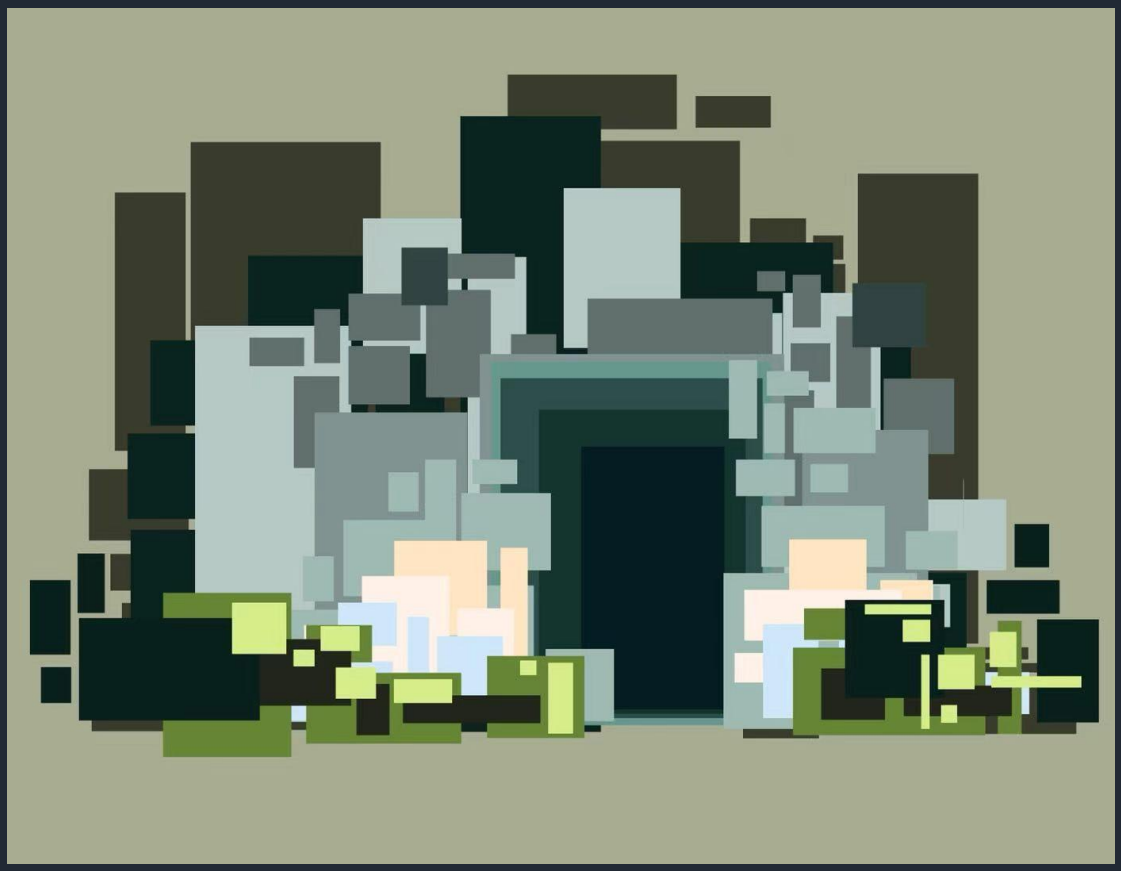

It always looks different.

What then?

Are you still there?

The moon is talking to the stone

Yeah.

The moon?

It looks different tonight.

Not that.

I don’t know.

Yeah.

The stone is responsing

Qa. Looking up

What do you see?

Qb. Looking down

What do you see?

Qc. Looking at the same place from another position.

What do you see?

This is a robot in a sea of flowers. Or maybe a painter. Take the questions when looking tha nest page.

